Huge Obelisk at Aswan Quarry, Egypt

How did they plan on cutting this obelisk free? The base is still attached to the rock floor. Obviously the obelisk was never finished, probably due to the huge cracks in it. The obelisk is made of granite, one of the hardest rocks on Earth...making it almost inconceivable how workers in the narrow trench were capable of carving the obelisk. How were they going to cut underneath it..

"The reports say that a galleon that stood the king's treasury P60,000 cost the Pampangans P150,000."

Mike Pangilinan Jp Mallari Marco D Nepomuceno

The Oldtime Galleon Commerce

How, when, and why it was established.—Eastward and westward voyages.—Significance of the commerce.—Chinese interest in the trade.—When, how, and why it ended.

The oldtime galleon commerce between the Philippines and New Spain, Mexico, or the northern vicereignty of Spain in the Americas, was the most venturesome and picturesque maritime commerce known in the history of man. It involved the longest voyages, fraught with the most danger and the most incessant risks of life and fortune; and it may be argued that nothing short of the gallant Spanish spirit of the 16th century could have conceived and established it, since it had to be done, not merely with the encouragement of the royal patronage, and under particular dangers, such as a foray on the Spanish main by a Drake or a Cavendish, but by aid of the royal requequer itself.

This same trade was always poorly managed, by account of Spanish shrews themselves, and characterized by every imaginable profligacy. It lasted precisely 150 years, and lasted, of course, the largest and best ships in the world, ships usually built in the Philippines, from Philippine materials, by Chinese and Filipino craftsmen and apprentices whose services were generously impressed rather than hired. If the building was at Cavite or some other point on the bay, timbers as well as men came from Pampanga, and the building of the galleon, or 2 to 3 for a single year, involved the most expensive sacrifices on the part of the people. The reports say that a galleon that stood the king's treasury $50,000 cost the Pampanganas $150,000. The work was a responsibility of the royal governors at Manila, and intercessions for sufferable treatment of the workmen impressed for the job came from the friars in charge of the parishes. At the same time, fiduciary funds in the charge of the brotherhoods were the main capital with which the commerce carried on.

Casualty of the extremest order typified all aspects of the trade, sometimes interrupting it for intervals of years, when the broken ends of business would invariably be taken up and pieced together where they had been parted; sometimes by shipwreck or even fire at sea, sometimes by the necessity to return to port at Manila in the early days of the Galleon Trade (from an old drawing of the harbor and city).

Manila, after months of buffering countless gales; more rarely, 5 times during the whole period, from capture of the galleons by enemies, Dutch or English, or in one case, Japanese on whose shores a rudeness and sea-beaten galleon had drifted for succor. The commerce began when Japan traded freely with the Philippines, as with all the world, though under restrictive coastal regulations as to her own shores; when indeed she wished to send competent men to Manila and Acapulco to learn the art of shipbuilding for the high seas; and the trade ended when for 180 years Japan had been shut up entirely from the West save for the annual exchange with the Dutch on their little island of Deshima in Nagasaki harbor, where they were permitted to maintain a factory under humble restrictions.

It is waste of hours to study the Letter of the Indies respecting the galleons. Necessity knows no law; the galleons were a necessity of existence to the Spanish community in the Philippines, and the king's laws respecting them were never obeyed. When the king said to build galleons of 300 tons, royal governors had them built 3 times as large, or even larger.

When the king said they might carry cargoes valued at $250,000, they carried cargoes valued in the millions of those classic pieces of eight, the silver money from the King of Silver, as Chinese emperors named the kings of Spain. This Mez, from the royal mints in Mexico, is the one enduring legacy of the commerce in the Far East, especially in China. The American trade dollar coined up to 1897 was the companion piece to this Mexican coin, to convenience American traders at Canton, Macao, Shanghai and Hongkong, and the Hongkong dollar is a lineal descendant of the peso.

If the king said to mount 60 brass cannon on one of his galleons, it was more probable that 15 would be mounted and the others would go into the hold, as a sort of special ballast, in order that larger quantities of illicit cargo could be freighted. When the king fixed the maximum value that a botria or a pieza, a standard fraction of a loteria, might contain, it was rather more than certain that the actual content of the package would be worth much more; just as the permisio, the silver that might be shipped from Mexico in payment for

The Social Security Trust Fund is set to run out in 2033 unless Congress acts to fix it. Right now you're taxed at 6.2 percent if you make less than $113,700. Someone who makes $1 million is taxed at 0.7 percent. I think millionaires should pay the same Social Security tax rate as everyone else, shoring up the trust fund for seniors today and in the decades to come. Share if you agree.

The average family pays a 6.2 percent Social Security tax rate.
Someone who earns $1 million/year pays just 0.7 percent.
